Abstract: The violin is one of the bowed string instruments. It was mainly used to be as a kind of music accompaniment for the dancers and songs, or a separate performance at the earliest. Later, violin playing also showed a variety of forms, more colorful, and different styles of violin performance art appeared with the changes of times and improvements of technology, which has also given rise to the emergence of various violin playing schools, there are primarily the Italian, French, Russian, German and other Schools created in the violin playing field. This paper focuses on the analyzes and research of these 4 different Schools of violin playing in order to facilitate the future development of the violin playing art and provide some useful help to the players.

Introduction

The violin was firstly very popular in Italy, since the Italian people prefer the musical instrument Violin, the Italian school of violin playing has formed after a long development. But learners in other countries have conducted some adjustments and improvements so as to form their own schools. So, the performance art style of each school is different, and it has continuously changed with the gradual changes of times. The following is a detailed analysis and research on the 4 different violin playing schools.

The Italian School

The Italian violin school is the earliest origin and development of the violin. It was formed in the Italian's folk violin playing, and had gradually formed its own style of playing. The Italian school, the earliest created school in the world, had constructed a solid foundation for the future development of the violin playing art. The founders of the school mainly included persons such as Vivaldi, Tartini and Paganini. In the 17th century, Corelli, an Italian, the most famous violinist who was known as the "king of the musicians.", was not only an important founder of the violin, but also was the world's first professional violinist, who played a very important role in the development of the violin. At that time, their creation and performance could be seen to be remarkably true to life, they could even imitate the cry of cats and barking of dogs by violins with a variety of tips on violin playing, which had made a tremendous impact on the society at the time and a lot of performers started to imitate theirs [1]. Then later, Corelli began to organize and edit some of the clutter data left by predecessors, so some relatively regular violin playing theories were formed by him.

Paganini was considered as the most influential player among the Italian school. He started to learn the violin playing when he was a child, and he became a player from his age of 13, he had been to the major cities of Europe throughout his lifetime. Till the 18th century, the traditional violin playing style had been unable to meet the needs of society at that time with the development and change of the era, people were eager to see a completely new style of violin playing. Paganini, who was affected by the trend of development at that time, created his passionate violin playing style to fully show his performances that was playing the violin with much more ideological enthusiasm and freely thinking. His kind of performance was to an extremely high extent promoted well at that time, so he had become the "king of the violin."

Since then, many well-known performing artists has emerged among the Italy school, we can see from the whole development the virtuosos of the Italian school has showed us the singing of the violin by the use of wide and stretching bowings of the violin and displayed us the tips of the violin playing, it is the important reason why the Italian school is replaced by the thoughts and feelings school. However, the Italian school still has played an important and indelible role in the development of the violin.

The French School

When the Italian school developed gradually in a decline trend, the French school was born slowly and quietly, and increasingly became active at the time of societies. In 1795, Paris Conservatory was formally established on behalf of the normalization of the French musical art and a formal teaching was formed. Leo Claire and Viotti brought the best things of the Italian school into France, and combined it with local culture and art forms so that the initial prototype of the French School was created [2]. Those famous representatives of the French school are Viotti, Kreutzer and Bayeux, etc.. Viotti, an Italian famous violinist, combined the outstanding skills of the Italian school and the performance skills of the French school due to his prolonged life in Paris. He was also the founder of the French school. His playing mainly showed us a noble momentum and passionate enthusiasm, the performance usually make people feel excited with enough enthusiasm. Kreutzer is a French violinist, a professor at the Paris Conservatory of Music with own certain insight in the professional domain. And affected by Viotti, his performance was not only more beautiful, but also it included certain characteristics of the times. Bayeux is a famous French violinist and also a professor at the Paris Conservatory, his instrumental performance showed us prominently the power of the sound and made us feel the vigorous and the honest. Chrysler is one of outstanding representatives of the French school in the 19th century in a title of "king of modern violin". He was born with good musical ability and was admitted to the Vienna Academy of Music at 7 years old. He integrated by a further creation the essence of the French School into his violin playing of some unique style [3]. His playing sounds plump, plentiful and delicate with a much more delicate handle of the details, shows his view of aestheticism. His playing style currently can be seen as a kind of unique and typical performance.

The German School

The German School also includes the Hungarian school, the style of the German school often varied because the development of the German school was influenced by the Italy school in the early stage and the French school later. It can be said that the German School formed its own style finally based on the characteristics of the nation's culture and influenced by a variety of different styles. Joachim is a Hungarian violinist. His musical performance seems more rigorous, an art of tension and rustic, it can really show the connotation of the works of art and pay more attention to the emotional expression of the work. He thinks that the works of art of a violin musician must involve more things, it is necessary to study many different art styles, and infuse own emotion into the performance so that to create own unique art style. Xgetty is also a famous representative of German school in the middle of the twentieth Century [4]. He entered the Royal College of Music in Budapest by the influence of his father in his childhood and was educated by Joachim. At the age of 13, he started to perform publicly in the school, which laid a solid foundation for his future career development. He absorbed the influence of many different violin playing styles and gradually he formed his own unique view with more clear direction. A lot of excellent works are displayed for the people by his superb skills, which has made a great contribution to the development of the violin.

The Russian School

The Russian school was affected by the impact of the above described 3 different schools before its coming into being, at that time, a lot of artists from Italy, France and Germany went to Russia for performances which had provided a foundation for the formation of the Russian school. The representatives of the Russian school mainly includes Elman, Heifetz, etc. Elman is an American violinist, one of the important persons contributed to the formation of the Russian school [5]. He began to learn violin playing since his childhood, he could play the violin well when he was 6 years old, and he was discovered by the violinist Orr who heard his performance and thought he was a genius, and thus was brought to the St. Petersberg Conservatory and taught by Orr in person. His performance is mainly of grand and magnificent, including very rich and full mood. Heifetz is the most far-reaching violinist of the Russian school in the 20th century. His performance is not only loud of the sound, expressive but also of superb skills which is able to show both the noble and magnificent of the romanticist, but also the modesty and rigorous of the classicism. We can feel that his performance has always been unique, and can be faithful to the original work without exaggerated expressions.

Conclusion

The generation of the 4 major violin playing schools is inevitable by the social development and changes of the times. The creation of each art style indicates the progress of the society and history, but the disappearance of certain type of the violin playing schools does not mean the extinct of the traditional art forms but another new form of its rebirth.
