Marketing communication is a marketing activities that share an information, influence or persuade, and to remember the targets market of the company and their product in order to receive, buy and be loyal to the product that is offered of a company. [1], [2]. Because of the marketing science development, now the purpose of communication is not longer limited to encouraging the first purchases, but also ensuring satisfaction to encourage purchases so that it increases the likelihood of repeated purchases and these purchases become loyal customers. Communication is needed to inform the consumers regarding the availability of an offer, the unique benefit of the offer, where and when it can be obtained and used by the offer [3]. The more competitive the business environment, the more it is necessary for the company to segment the market and the more important it is for the company to align its marketing mix with the chosen target market so that it can effectively allocate resources while providing the highest value to its customers. Segmentation is very important for business success that adopts a segmentation approach to improve its performance [4].

Before a company conducts a series of promotions, there are three stages of marketing communication strategies. that need to be carried out by the company, namely determining segmentation, targeting, and positioning. 1). Segmentation is identifying specific groups in the market whose wants and needs can be met by the company's products. Segmentation divides groups based on demographic, geographical, psychographic, behavioral and benefit aspects [6]. 2). Targeting is to choose one or several consumer segments that will be the focus of marketing and promotion activities. 3). Positioning is a communication strategy that relates to how audiences place a brand or company product in their brain, so that the audience has a certain assessment. Positioning strategy is a strategy that seeks to create unique differentiation in the minds of target consumers, so that the image or brand image is superior to other brands or products [1].
